Onet to join the National Union of Security Companies (SNES)

The private security subsidiary of the Onet group of services and engineering is to join the National Union of Security Companies (the French SNES). Already a member of the Union of Private Security Companies (the French USP), Onet Security is the first key player in the sector to join both professional organizations.

Through this double membership, Onet's subsidiary specialized in the security business aims to strengthen the dialogue within the sector by consolidating best practices, in particular between SMEs and large companies, in order to better face the key issues in the profession: training, broadening the framework of activity and maintaining good regulatory practices.

"The fact that the board of directors of the USP authorises the double membership of a major player is the demonstration that it wants to represent and defend the profession in all its components. This decision does not call into question its unity: quite the contrary, it makes it all the stronger," said Claude Tarlet, President of the USP.

The presence of Onet's security subsidiary in these two professional unions is also a strong signal for multi-service companies involved in the security sector. With more than 50 agencies and 4,640 employees, its entities master all the security professions in order to implement technological and human solutions for its clients in a multi-business group.

"We want to bring our multi-service expertise to these two employers' bodies because we are convinced that both SMEs and large companies can progress together for the benefit of our customers and our employees," said Gilles Lafon, Deputy Director General at Onet.

The Onet Group will continue to participate actively in the work of the USP Board of Directors, and will respond to all requests from the SNES Board of Directors in order to bring its own contribution.
